

The Great Red Wines of Italy

One of the greatest wine producing nations in the world, wine has always been an integral part of the culture of the table in Italy. The indigenous varietals of Italy possess their own unique characteristics; many have tried to copy them in the New World, all but a select few fail to capture the emotion, culture and terroir of the land. The wines are crafted most importantly for their expression of fruit. The elegance and complexity of these wines is derived from their unique native soils and traditional wine making methods. The wines are listed by region, from light to full-bodied.

The Great Wines of Giuseppe Quintarelli

Known as "the Master of the Veneto," Giuseppe Quintarelli makes some of the world's most sought-after wines. His limited production Amarones and Valpolicellas are the benchmark for excellence. Their greatness stems from the inherent quality of the terroir and natural talent of this master, whose concept of vintage approval and strict grape selection is virtually unrivaled. Quintarelli puts his wines on the market when he deems them ready, often keeping them in the cellar for decades until the right moment arrives
